SEWAGE PURIFICATION

with minimum attention.

A YEAR ago a well-known Motor Engineer put down one of our schemes. We have just heard from him that he is disposing of adjoining land for Building Sites. He adds—"I am prohibiting the use of cesspools on the ground, and stipulating that an approved system of sewage purification shall be installed. The one supplied by you for my own premises here works admirably, and has been inspected by the Architect to one of the purchasers of sites."

This testimony for our scheme after twelve months actual work, and condemnation of cesspools justifies our claim that our schemes produce an effluent comparable with rainwater in appearance, free from smell, safe to deliver to any ditch without causing the slightest nuisance. A book giving particulars of our schemes will be sent post free on application.

The only Surety

FEW people can tell the quality of wire netting by looking at it. An expert can—maybe; but then few of us are experts. The ordinary buyer can tell the quality of wire netting best by looking at the label. If he sees B.W.N.M.A. on it, then he knows it is the best quality.

Wire netting made in the factories of the British Wire Netting Manufacturers' Association is marked with their brand. That is a guarantee of its quality.

A booklet on British Wire Netting is now published. It is the first of a series by practical men who tell of ways of using wire netting for all sorts of jobs.

A New Chapter in the History of a Famous Firm

IT was in the reign of William IV that the firm of John Brinsmead & Sons, Ltd., was founded, and from the year that Queen Victoria came to the throne it was their proud boast that they turned out Britain's best pianos. Since the first great International Exhibition in 1851, and onward, Brinsmeads achieved a long and unbroken succession of triumphs in obtaining the Highest Awards and Special Diplomas throughout the world.

Q Rubinstein, Gounod, Bach, Pachmann, Patti and many another have lent their testimony to the perfection of the work of Brinsmeads, testimonials jealously preserved among the archives of this old firm.

Q The beautiful interior decorations of No. 17, Cavendish Square, and Mr. Gilbert Bayes's clever and original ornamentation of the Wigmore Street exterior, shown on the border of this advertisement, will make the new Brinsmead House one of the show places of the town.

IN the topmost branches of a 60 ft. elm this bird would make a fine target. Could you fetch it down? It would depend to a considerable extent on the accuracy of your rifle—you could not hope to shoot well with an inferior weapon. For rook shooting—splendid practice during the close season—and similar classes of sport, you cannot get a better rifle than one of the three B.S.A.'s—the Repeater, the Air Rifle, and the No. 1—described here. They are thoroughly high-grade weapons made with two particular requirements in view—strength and accuracy.

WIND SCREEN DRAUGHTS AND BODY COMFORT

TO the ordinary man is there a simpler thing imaginable than the design and production of a really good motor car body? One simply sketches out a pleasing outline, fills in details, decides on the materials to be used and hands the nearest commercial approach is the provision of adjustable seats, which allow drivers of different stature to secure that leg room which suits them best. But this very method imposes some faults of its own, for alteration of the leg room of a seat is very apt to convert what was some cases these compromises are highly satisfactory, and a few years ago the tendency to deepen the seating and give ample support to the shoulders of the occupants of the car was very marked and met with very wide approval. It seems, however, to be falling out of drawing and specification to a moderately competent carpenter, and the result should be a perfect body. That is the ideal. The practice is a very different affair, and it is a perpetual and natural problem to the car user why the body designer seems unable to keep up with his confrère of the chassis in the march of progress. Certainly, car bodies are becoming more handsome affairs from year to year, and to the eye at least body design and comfort have never before been so good as they are to-day. But quite a short run in some of the most attractive-looking bodies gives a drastic shock to all these beautiful and trusting ideals. The upholstery may be of the best, the woodwork may be of the most expensive and embody elaborate inlay work, while even the running boards outside the body may, in their equipment with foot wiping mats and step-lights to show the owner where to place his foot at three o'clock in the morning, still further emphasise the general idea of supreme luxury and comfort.

Unfortunately, true ease and the best comfort are not secured by elegance of appearance. The most important single factor influencing the enjoyment or otherwise that one experiences when riding in a car is the angle of the seats and the accommodation provided for those very necessary but very awkward things, one's legs. To ensure the best possible results every motor car body ought to be made like a suit of clothes—to measure for the one who has to use it—but as far as I am aware even modern elaborations have never yet gone to this length. The its satisfactory angle in one position into a hopeless and uncomfortable one in another.

SEAT ANGLES.

With ideas of what constitutes the best and most comfortable seat angle, so widely at variance among different drivers, combined with the impracticability of each body being designed to suit its purchaser in this respect, the car user must be content with such compromises as the body designer can offer him. In fashion, and what used to be the much-abused American principle of body design—high seating with low body sides and an almost upright position for the occupants—is being, regrettably, copied.

If this is what the public wants, all well and good, but I suspect very strongly that the public only wants it because it can get nothing else, or because so many car buyers, lacking experience of what can be achieved in the way of body comfort, are willing to accept what is offered them as the best that can be hoped for. No more pronounced example of this changing tendency in body design is to be found than in the old and new bodywork of the 11.9 h.p. Bean car. Until the last Olympia Show both two and four seater 11.9 h.p. Beans had bodies to sit in which was a pleasure and to ride in which was a real joy. They were roomy and they were deep, so that every part of the occupant's body was well supported and no impression was suggested of sitting on the car rather than in it. But, presumably owing to the demands of fashion, this design has now been swept by the board and the present bodies offer much less of that luxurious depth of seating and little of that shoulder support which is at once so rare and so useful.

To the layman it is strange that, although the provision of some adjustment in a fore and aft direction of the seats of a car is becoming so common, no designer appears to have devoted attention to the provision of adjustable seat angles. In most cars the angle taken by the occupant's body, due to the shape and angle of the cushion and squab of the seats, is the most important single factor influencing comfort. Varying leg room is largely a matter of ease of control, but comfort, as such, depends even more on seat angles. Why, then, is there no means of controlling it? Admitting that the problem needs some consideration before it can be solved satisfactorily, it does not appear to present any insuperable obstacle, and the first manufacturer who incorporates it as standard and who lets the public know that it is there should reap a very useful and well deserved reward.

A really good driving position. Both seat angle and upholstery are correct, and the wheel is sensibly disposed in relation to the wind screen and driver.

The draughts caused by upright and sloping screen respectively, showing how in the latter case they are thrown over the driver's head. The actual path of the draught varies, of course, with the speed of the car through the air, but the sketch is drawn for average conditions.

The position of the division between the two panels of a screen is important, as it may easily affect the driver's line of vision; (right) how draught and rain may be deflected by the two-panel screen with both panels open.

FALSE RAKE AND INADEQUATE SHOULDER SUPPORT.

Because imitation of American practice has not yet attained the stage of prompting the British maker to provide absolutely upright seating it will be found that many cars have seats of which the backs slope rearwards at quite a sharp angle. Superficially, this slope should give to the occupants a pleasantly semi-reclining position, but actually it is often far more uncomfortable and even more unsightly than the almost upright arrangement. At one time this rearwards sloping angle was carried to such lengths as to impose upon the driver the necessity of craning his neck and head forward so as to get any view of the road ahead, while it was never possible to get sufficient view to give that ease of control which is all but a prime necessity for cars used under ordinary touring conditions, where close driving, as in traffic and in garages, is often unavoidable. To-day it is rare to find a car of which the seat angles are carried to such absurd excess, but it is common to find cars in which the resultant fault is almost as pronounced, though secured by other means.

These other means are the shaping of the upholstery of the back of the seat so that totally inadequate support is offered to the driver's back and especially to the upper portions of it near the shoulders. No aspect of the detail design of a car body and its equipment exercises greater influence on the comfort of the occupants than the measure of support offered to their shoulders. When the driver can literally rest in his car with plenty of support to all those portions of his anatomy that require it he can drive much farther in the course of a day than is possible when he has always to be straining or, at least, exerting himself to maintain a position that will give him proper control of his car, and many a long-distance record has been made and many another has been spoilt by the position that the driver was forced to adopt. For this reason it may well be that the most satisfactory car to the man who is likely to make frequent long-distance journeys is not the car with the best chassis, the most highly efficient engine, the best springing, nor even the best all-round performance, but the car that offers the best driving position, and many old and experienced motorists of my acquaintance are in the habit of choosing their new cars with a leading eye on body comfort and the naturalness and the easy control position that the seating affords.

It would, of course, be foolish to allow undue emphasis on this important matter of seating position to outweigh all other considerations; but, other things being reasonably equal, the sensible car buyer will lay more stress on the comfort of a car that otherwise promises to suit him than he will on any points of sheer technical interest or novelties of chassis design.

Mere design of the seating of a car is not the only factor determining its comfort, especially to the driver, and the other things to be considered are all inter-dependent. Thus, there is the rake of the steering column and the angle of the wheel on top of it. The more the seating position tends towards the reclining the more should the steering column approximate in its lie to the horizontal, and those few cars that have almost horizontal steering columns, with some sort of intermediary shaft taking the motion of the wheel down to the steering gear-box, are almost invariably the most comfortable cars to drive. Whether the extra comfort gained is too dearly bought by the added complications of the interposed gearings in the steering system is a matter of opinion, and it is true that any extra working parts that could possibly be done without are to be deprecated on any chassis.

But a sensible rake to the steering column is an essential to real comfort for the driver, and the growing tendency for the fitting of adjustable steering columns to cars of all sorts and sizes deserves every encouragement. One of the best designs I have seen in this detail is that of the 14 h.p. Bean chassis, where the range of adjustment is larger than usual and is to some extent improved by the provision of a flexible fabric joint in the column, though the actual purpose of this joint is the insulation of the driver's arms from road shocks.

WIND SCREEN AND STEERING WHEEL DISTANCES.

A very common and, unfortunately, apparently growing fault in the design of modern touring car bodies is the placing of the wind screen, steering wheel and driver too far apart. The sketch showing a lady driver having to stretch her arms almost to their limit in order to reach the steering wheel, and the steering wheel, almost as far away from the wind screen, is by no means the exaggeration that might be supposed. It was my fate to drive such a car across France and back in very bad weather last year, and a worse experience, short of actual breakdown or absence of hood and side curtains, could hardly be imagined. On such a car the all-weather equipment needs to be of an exceptionally high order, and it also has to be in all but continual use; but while all-weather equipment may prevent some of the horrible back-draughts that whistle round the screen and catch the driver's neck, it will not mitigate the pain arising from prolonged stretching to reach the steering wheel. The only remedy when the car is not fitted with adjustable seating is to lower the seat itself by use of a much thinner cushion than that provided as standard. It is an effective remedy but it is really a poor substitute for proper design in the first instance.

It may be taken as a fairly safe general rule that the closer wind screen, steering wheel and driver are to each other the greater the comfort and the better the weather protection and freedom from draughts of the human component. One sketch shows the driver pleasantly close to the wheel so that she may hold it indefinitely without becoming tired, but she is in this instance subjected to fierce back-draughts from the screen at all ordinary touring speeds. If the car could be driven at well over a mile a minute, the back-draught trouble might not be so very acute, but as this is such a long way removed from ordinary touring practice it is no more than a futile "if" or "might have been."

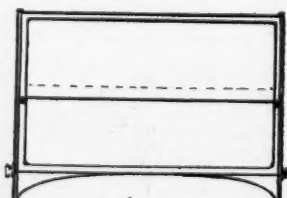

The sixth sketch, illustrating this point of wind screen and driver's relative distance, shows the best position that may be hoped for in an ordinary touring car with an upright wind screen. The driver reaches the steering wheel without effort, and the inevitable back-draught from the upright screen is carried well behind her head, so that there is no penalty of stiff necks or other forms of chill. The same sketch also admirably illustrates a point made above—the provision for adequate shoulder support and a seat angle that gives a natural sitting position without effort or strain.

WIND SCREEN DRAUGHTS.

It is obvious to the most casual observer that the solution of the problem of wind screen draughts is still a long

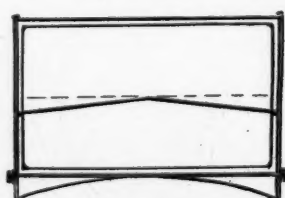

When there is no overlap between the two panels of a screen, wet is allowed to enter between the joint even if this be quite close.

The straight overlap here shown prevents rain from entering for a short time, but the wet soon begins to creep up the inside of the top panel and enters almost as if there were a clear gap.

The V-shaped overlap is effective in preventing rain from entering, because the surplus moisture falls down to the point of the V.

The inverted V overlap has the same effect as the simple V shape, but to a higher degree, though or the best effect the upper point of the V should be lower than shown.

Huile de Luxe a success where others fail.

"OLD ENGINES and OIL BILLS"

(The heading is selected by a motorist of experience who writes us regarding a pre-war Humber.)

GENTLEMEN,

The Modern Engine is usually so very economical on oil that the cost is negligible.

But with an old engine the matter is different. There are scores of Motorists like myself who run one of the pre-war cars.

An 11.9 Humber 1914 that I am running is a magnificent tribute to the materials this firm use, and is to-day running 1,000 miles per month without much attention and with ample power. But like all old engines the oil consumption has been for some years a big expense.

Exhaustive tests of the leading makes were made and the heaviest weight of a standard firm's gave 200 miles to the gallon. I mentioned this to my garage owner (a skilled engineer) and he promptly told me to let him fill her up with Price's Huile de Luxe, adding, "you will find it THE oil of all." Winter and summer now for twelve months I get exactly 600 m.p.g. Previously keeping the car in a stone, unheated garage, starting was a horror. I can swing the engine after a night's frost. To cut a heavy oil bill by two thirds and get a smoother engine and easy swinging should interest the "old car" owner.

Yours truly,

We guarantee this to be a genuine expression of opinion, absolutely unsolicited, from a Motorist who is unknown to us. The original is always open to inspection, and, by the way, we are always happy to advise on lubrication difficulties.

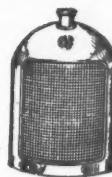

If unobtainable locally, write us for a preliminary supply. Gallon tins, carriage paid, 7/9 each. Five-gallon drums, carriage paid 31/3 each way ahead. Some of the very best of cars in other respects have the most painful possible wind screen designs, which, though sometimes quite attractive on paper or in appearance, are in complete alliance with the pneumonia fiend and the dentist. And it is very strange how two screens, apparently similar in all respects, will have entirely different effects on two different cars. The whole problem is, obviously, not one of screen shape and design alone, but also of the location of the screen on the car. The upright two-panel screen that is now easily the most popular type is just as easily the most frequent and the worst offender in causing back-draughts.

Very often owners of cars so fitted may lessen almost to nothing the back-draught effect by judicious experimenting with various openings of the screen. When both panels are adjustable, driving with both slightly opened outwards will often do very much towards reducing back-draught and under certain circumstances will eliminate it altogether; but when only the top panel is adjustable, back-draught can usually be reduced only at the cost of increased front-draught. In fine weather this may be the lesser of the two evils; but when it is raining, a direct frontal draught means a direct frontal attack on the part of the rain, so that the upright two-panel screen seems to fail both ways. The sloping two-panel screen is a lesser offender, for its back-draughts are less noticeable, though its protection against rain is no better should requirements of visibility demand that either panel shall be open. In fact, many sloping screens are worse in this respect than the upright kind, for their very slope seems to catch the rain and extend towards it a particularly warm invitation to enter into the interior of the car.

The least possible back-draught with ordinary touring cars and bodies is undoubtedly secured by the use of the single panel screen sloped rearwards at a fair angle, but this type of screen has limitations to outweigh its merit of cheapness which are sufficient to put it out of the contemplation of all car users other than those to whom lowest possible cost is the first and last of all considerations. Its objections are that the only means of securing visibility in wet weather are either to have the screen so lowered that it offers no protection whatever to those behind it, or to fit a wiper, which in the majority of cases will prevent a proper joint between screen and hood. And nothing causes worse draughts than a space between a single panel screen and the hood—such draughts are invariably worse than any arising from the open panels of a compound screen, though it is difficult to see why it should be so.

OVERCOMING FRONTAL DRAUGHTS.

Draughts that arise from the screen and may therefore, be called frontal draughts, even though they may actually catch the occupants of the car at their backs, may often be usefully reduced and sometimes eliminated by the use of one or two simple "gadgets." There are, for instance, the detachable glass or non-inflammable celluloid side screens that may be fitted readily and quickly to any car and which will catch and deflect a draught that would otherwise have direct access to the driver's neck. The same effect may be secured by the use of triangular pieces of canvas stretched from about half way up the screen uprights and the bottom of these pillars in a tapering extension rearwards. Such pieces of canvas may be fixed quite easily by turn-buttons, and if the rearmost button is about level with the shoulders of the front seat occupants the reduction of draught will be surprising.

Properly made and designed side curtains may, of course, be used to the same end, but they must be accepted as clumsy and ugly substitutes for proper screen design and location. The best of these draught preventers is the canvas side screen which, when not required for use, can be folded away in very small space and stowed in a door pocket of the car.

DRAUGHTS IN ENCLOSED CARS.

The totally enclosed car is often the worst offender in the matter of draughts, for while the means of ingress for unwanted air may be less than in an open car, the means of egress are correspondingly reduced, with the result that the draught effect inside is actually increased. The presence of such draughts is admittedly a sign of defective body design or workmanship, but nevertheless it is a defect to be found on many first-class bodies. The use of rubber packing for doors or windows is seldom an effective method of prevention, though rubber or metal door stops or buffers fitted to doors and windows will often contribute to a real improvement and will, incidentally, reduce any rattles that may have developed as the result of wear.

Any enclosed car naturally presents a greater problem in draught prevention than an open vehicle because some means of ventilation must be provided. A very promising effort to solve the problem is to be seen in the Ventilator. This is a device for fitting into the roof of an enclosed car which allows air to enter through and over a set of curved obstacles, which without materially reducing the quantity considerably affects the velocity and therefore the draught. The Ventilator has emerged satisfactorily from an R.A.C. demonstration during which it was proved to ventilate a closed car very effectively without causing draught or allowing rain to enter even during heavy showers.

of the driver from draught and from rain in wet weather is concerned is the matter of visibility they allow. It is easy to secure good visibility if protection be ignored, and the converse holds good, but a happy compromise is not easy to attain. It used to be the fashion to make two panel screens with each panel of equal depth—the dividing line between the two divided the screen into halves. But whatever the shape of the join between the two panels such screens were never watertight, and the majority of drivers who sat behind them complained that the division came just across their line of vision when they adopted a normal driving position, such as that most directly invited by the seating of the car.

Such wind screens were like loud speakers for their bodies cried aloud to all the world "My designer has never sat in me," and their announcement must be accepted as the only possible explanation of the carelessness and absurdity they represented. Unfortunately, they are not quite obsolete and there are several cars of which the driving position compels a driver of average stature to look always through a crack in the screen. And nothing is more annoying or tiring to the eyes on a long run than this broken line of vision.

To overcome the defect many designers are turning to screens of which the two panels are of unequal depth, and so long as the two-panel screen is used this would appear to be the only possible remedy. But it is, I think, a mistake for the larger of the two panels to be mounted at the top of the screen as is common. When the seating of the car is high or when the driver is abnormally tall—say over six feet—in a word, when by some means or other the level of the driver's eyes is brought above what may be considered the normal line, then the larger panel may advisedly be the upper. But these cases are the exception rather than the rule and the sensible body designer will work for the greatest happiness of the greatest number and not for abnormal cases.

THE WORKING PANEL.

For want of a better name let us call the panel through which the driver mostly looks the working panel. Should this be the upper or the lower in an ordinary car intended for an average driver? The only reason that occurs to me in favour of its being the upper is that this arrangement is likely to give the driver a clear view of the road immediately ahead of the car—say within six yards of the radiator. But there is nothing else in its favour and one very seldom drives by such a short distance of road ahead.

If the lower panel be the worker, then it presupposes (1) that the driver has some screen at a fair level above his head, which is a very desirable thing, for it considerably assists in weather protection when the hood is not raised, and (2) that the seating position is fairly low, which is desirable because the driver will then be well in the body of the car and not merely on it.

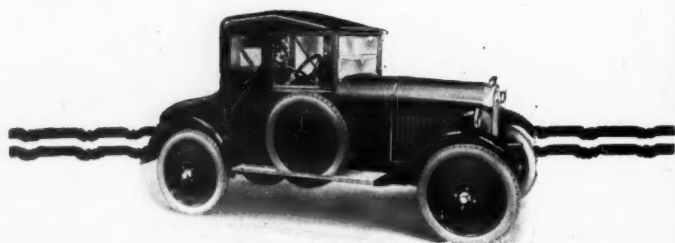

Further, and of even greater consequence, the lower panel is almost always protected by the upper to some extent from rain, so that whereas the upper panel may be covered with distorting or opaque spots the lower will for some useful portion of its area remain clear. If, therefore, the lower be the working panel the driver will be much less troubled by inclement weather and its consequent poor visibility than he will if he be dependent on the upper panel for his view of the road ahead. Finally, the provision of an outlook on the road ahead close to the car is not by any means limited to the upper panel, for a sensibly designed and located lower working panel can give perfect and adequate view of all the road that a driver ever needs to see.

PANEL JOINTS.

Although exercising no appreciable influence on the draught passed by a screen the shape of the join between the two panels is of supreme importance in determining the amount of wet allowed to enter when the car is being driven through rain with the screen closed, and not a little influence is still exercised when the screen is open. The straight join with no overlap between the two panels is undoubtedly the worst possible. True, when there is an overlap between two straight edges the join is not absolutely watertight, for capillary attraction and the action of draught between the two panels will bring quite a lot of unwanted water on to the front seat occupants. But when there is no overlap the fault is even more pronounced and the practice of fitting between the two panels a rubber packing strip is of little use.

It would appear that the fact of the matter is that an absolutely watertight joint is unattainable. Why it should be so I do not know, but on all sorts and conditions of cars some water ingress will be found through the wind screen join. The remedy indicated would appear, therefore, to lie not in futile attempts to make watertight a joint that cannot be or at least cannot remain so, but to shape the panels so that water is conducted away from the join as quickly as possible.

The sketches illustrating this point make it clearer than could any written description and they are quite obvious—a V-shaped upper panel carries the water as quickly as possible to a point whence it falls off the screen altogether, being allowed no time to collect and thence form a thin film to creep up the lower panel and over it into the car. If there are two such points down to which the water may run it will get away faster than if there be only one and so it is that the inverted V upper panel is even more effective than the simple V.

SUMMER FROCKS AND MATERIALS

MILLINERY DE LUXE.

THAT wonderful burst of sunshine round and about Easter, which may be still with us when this appears, brought forth in all their glories both materials for and frocks of summer fabrics; possessions we are all now busy acquiring. And never shall we have greater pleasure in the wearing of these delightfully cool, dainty things than after the long spell of sombre winter attire.

Where to begin I, frankly, scarcely know. There is so much to talk about, from gingham at a shilling the yard to lovely organdies trimmed with masses of tiny lace frills, Georgette and crêpe de Chine gowns arranged in infinitesimal pleats, figured cotton marocains that make up into the most distractingly charming dresses, voiles, plain and patterned cotton crêpes and *shantung*s, the latter in a range of new colours.

A suit of white bouclette is a very desirable addition to a summer wardrobe, as is a tennis frock of white schappe, together with dresses of washing striped or checked silk or crêpe de Chine. These last cost in the first instance, but pay in the long run, since nothing disturbs their serenity. The dyes used are of the best, as behoves the character of the silken grounds, which wash without losing any of their substance.

One style some of us are beginning to weary of, and which may probably melt away before the advent of summer washing fabrics, is the straight bolster back. This has only really proved becoming to the very few, and those of slim figure; and the set and symmetry, which are so all important, are pretty certain to be lost during the laundry process. So let there be a waist line somewhere, hip length or longer if the figure will stand it, only faintly defined; and, unquestionably with figured stuffs, the simpler the style the better.

For the rest it is pleats, pleats and yet again pleats, ranging from the tiniest bébé things that only a machine can produce. Fortunately, the latter are available, and half the dresses one sees at the moment have been submitted to these mechanical methods in a skeleton condition to be "picoted," veined or pleated. Failing pleats, then skirts flare in front for the day and frequently all round for the evening. There has been a certain hesitancy in the acceptance of the flared skirt, but it has arrived, and is being found as becoming to matronly as it is to slim wearers. There is far more cunning in the modelling of a flare than is exacted by pleats, some of the former being arranged to fall fuller at one side than the other; or, again, the front may be almost flat and the flare occur at either side.

An exquisite evening toilette, of metal brocade in rich harlequin colourings, had the flare apron front hemmed to the depth of six or seven inches with clipped brown marabout, the long cross-over sleeveless corsage fastening at one side with a green malachite ornament.

In Paris they are wearing with this class of gown shoes of mother-o'-pearl patent leather—or that is what the composing material is termed, although it is difficult to associate leather with something that reflects all the prismatic hues under the influence of artificial light. Naturally, as a supreme novelty these shoes are expensive—a fact, probably, that will only enhance their value in the eyes of the vraie élégante.

Hats are likewise beginning to intrigue us by their increased size; although I scarcely see the logic of those who are saying that shingled heads will be sorry for themselves when larger brims are de rigueur. Crowns can always be adapted. All the same, I am still of the opinion that the shorn head is doomed. The change may not come quickly—there is, of course, that sound argument of its coolness for summer and sports in particular—but it is on the way. Meanwhile, there is no manner of doubt as to the increasing favour bestowed on wide brim picturesque-shaped hats, a bevy of Reslaw models submitted to me lately conclusively emphasising this trend. These are exceptionally lovely and exclusive creations, that all the best shops are showing, and of which a trio is here pictured.

That artistic chapeau underlined with close rows of narrow gold lace is of nigger brown crin, with brim of wallflower yellow Georgette. All the trimming is concentrated at the back, this comprising a crushed velvet and silk rose in shaded wallflower yellow, from which hangs a trail of raisins in tone and long rose stems. Alike in colour, character and line, this is a real chef-d'œuvre.

Of crin straw is the other shady shape, the crown a mass of cartwheel rosettes, the soft undulating brim underlined and piped with tangerine Georgette to accord with the graceful swathe passed round the crown. Catching this down at one side come two large silk roses that shade off in the centre to a yellowy brown—the whole a perfect colour scheme for wearing with a biscuit, beige or white summer toilette.

Equally arresting in its way is the smaller model of black Tagal, the brim underlined and piped above with apple green Georgette, to which is toned the deep crown band of green and silver galon, the latter reappearing at the end of the long Georgette scarf that is worn lightly thrown round the throat. # THE HOUSE OF BRINSMEAD

WE so frequently have to deplore the demolition of an old building to make way for some commercial enterprise that there is the greater pleasure in noting an example to the exact contrary. This is afforded by the house at the corner of Cavendish Square and Wigmore Street, till recently the residence of the Earl of Bessborough, but now constituting the new home of Messrs. John Brinsmead and Sons, the well known firm of piano makers. The house dates from the later years of George II's reign, and though, like many another, it has suffered alterations during successive ownerships, it still preserves intact its principal features. Outside it presents an orderly brick façade, with that general air of sedateness and sobriety which was characteristic of Georgian architecture, if not of Georgian manners. Who precisely was its designer probably only the estate records could determine. The name of Adam seems the handiest in such a case, and, though all that is Georgian is not Adam, at least we may say that his was the mind which prompted many of his contemporaries and followers, such as Leverton and Gandy.

It is particularly fitting that Messrs. Brinsmead should come into possession of this old house, because they have been associated with the district since their foundation in William IV's reign, and the original home of the firm was in Wigmore Street, almost opposite their present building. It is the Wigmore Street front of the premises that particularly arrests the attention, for the ground-floor storey has been framed and divided by pilasters and entablature, and enriched by some well modelled sculpture work in painted cement by Mr. Gilbert Bayes. The central doorway, approached by a flight of marble steps, is flanked by draped figures of Music and Art, and there is a third figure of Science at one end. These figures are about 6ft. in height, and their treatment is reminiscent of Goujon's at the Carnavalet. A shop window occupies the space to the right of the doorway, while to the left is a name panel crowned by a charmingly modelled panel of child figures playing various musical instruments, a little pianist appropriately occupying the centre: altogether a captivating piece of work.

Within the building considerable alterations were necessary to adapt it to its new use, but in the hands of Messrs. Bennett and Hossack, architects, the old work has had sympathetic consideration, and as much as possible of it has been allowed to remain undisturbed. The ground floor has been adapted as one long showroom, at the end of which is a portrait of the last John Brinsmead, "father of the piano trade" in this country, who died in 1908. On the first floor, which is reached by a staircase of delicate character, the big drawing-room serves as another showroom, where many fine pianos can be heard. The room has a beautiful ceiling in low relief plasterwork, and from it are hung some old glass chandeliers. The walls retain their original panelled decorations, including some paintings in the manner of Zucchi and Angelica Kauffman. The second floor has been apportioned to twelve training studios, admirable alike for their acoustics and for their decorative treatment.

Thus has the old house been suited to its new career—as prosperous, let us hope, as the firm has enjoyed in the past.

pose by the introduction of extra firmer bones in front and other bonings at the back, where moreover it is laced instead of buttoned, so that its fitting may be more easily regulated. It can be depended upon to mould even the fullest figures into the most fashionable straight-ness of line and to give the necessary support without any feeling of compression, while its beautiful unbroken lines are a perfect foundation for the latest day, evening and dance frocks, and also for sports costumes. The "Corslo-Juno" is a revelation of comfort and for the summer months at home and for tropical wear at all times; its cool lightness will be a special benefit and delight. It can be washed as easily and often as ordinary undergarments.

THE "CORSLO-JUNO" (as sketch) hip belt and bust bodice combined made of cotton tricot, laced at back, with two sets of steels, also two short steels in centre front, removable for washing.
Measurement required, bust, waist and hips.
